The lack of a Facebook page for the graduation ceremony means the school is missing out on an opportunity to reach the majority of its graduates.

John Black, the head of the Newton Falls High School class of 2012, said the school could have Facebook pages for different groups, such as the senior class or the student council, and still benefit from the social media platform.

"It’s a shame that the school administration is not taking advantage of this opportunity," Black said. "If we could, we would create a page that allows students to share pictures, videos, and updates about their experiences.

Black acknowledged that some students may not be comfortable using Facebook, but he believes the benefits outweigh the drawbacks.

"It’s not like we’re forcing them to use it," he said. "They can still share their experiences on other platforms, but it would be nice to have a central location where everyone can come together and celebrate this important milestone.

Black said he hopes the school administration will consider creating a Facebook page for the graduation ceremony in the future.

He added, "We want to create a sense of community and connection among our graduates, and Facebook is a great tool for doing that."

Black said he hopes the school administration will consider creating a Facebook page for the graduation ceremony in the future.

He added, "We want to create a sense of community and connection among our graduates, and Facebook is a great tool for doing that."